

PeopleNews

Team of the year

Medical Communications for Combat Casualty Care's Product Management Office was named the Army Medical Department's 2005 Mercury Information Management/Information Technology Team of the Year at the HIMSS 2006 annual awards ceremony in San Diego last week. MC4 also earned the 2005 Military Health System, Army Medical Information Systems/Information Management Team of the Year Award.

Pictured above are, from left to right, Lt. Col. Edward Clayson, product manager, MC4, Col. Charles Hume, chief information officer, Army Medical Department, Brig. Gen. David Rubenstein, commanding general, AMEDD Center & School and Maj. Wilson Ariza, assistant product manager, MC4. Clayson and Ariza accepted the awards on behalf of the MC4 team.

"These awards are great recognition for the hard work and dedication the MC4 program has taken to accomplish our mission," Clayson said. "But our job has just begun. As we fall in with Soldiers in Afghanistan, we will be sustaining the most comprehensive medical information technology system ever deployed in theater."

The Mercury Award recognizes an

AMEDD team that makes significant accomplishments and demonstrates outstanding excellence and achievement in IM/IT. The award is named after Task Force Mercury, a major effort that significantly reengineered IM/IT management and processes in the AMEDD.

For more information, visit www.mc4.army.mil.

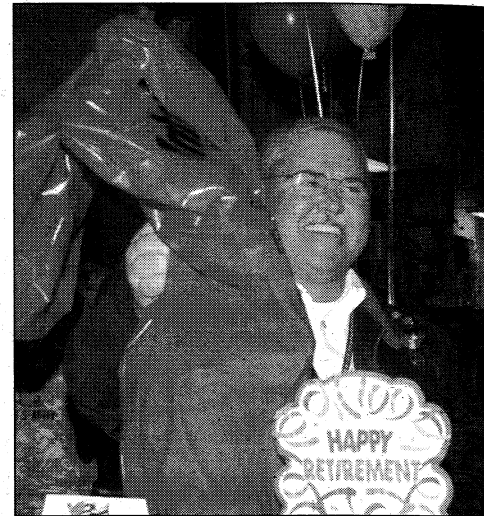

Marines get new commander

Lt. Col. Michael Martin, left, relinquished command of Company B, 4th Light Armored Reconnaissance Battalion to Capt. Michael Stolzenburg, right, Feb. 26 during a ceremony at the Flair Reserve Training Center.

Stolzenburg takes command of the unit after a 12-month deployment to Iraq, where he served as a tactical adviser for Iraqi Defense Forces.

Martin, who took command of the company in 2003, will attend the Command and Staff College (Reserve Seminar) at Willow Grove Naval Air Station in Pennsylvania.

Retiring after 33 years

John Roszell, pictured above, retires from Federal Service March 3 after more than 33 years. He worked at the Charleston Naval Ship Yard in Charleston, S.C., before coming to Fort Detrick in October of 1994.

He began his career at Fort Detrick as the supervisor of the Plumbing Shop and worked his way up to chief, Operations and Maintenance Division, his current position.

Leave needed

The employees listed below are approved for the Voluntary Leave Transfer Program due to medical emergencies:

Want the Scales Tipped In Your Favor?

- Family Law
- Criminal/Motor Vehicle
- Business/Civil Litigation
- Estate Planning

We can help -
Call today for

